Part-time and professional development programs host information sessions

The three departments made brief presentations and current students in the programs were on hand to answer questions.

On Wednesday evening, October 16, the Graduate School, the Center for Management Development and Admissions for Non-Traditional Students held a joint information session for prospective students. More than 30 people attended the event and explored Bryant's part-time programs and professional development courses. This is the first time that the three departments have collaborated on a cooperative event and it was a distinct success.

"We were very pleased with the turnout," said Stacie Lavine, Assistant Director of Admissions for the Graduate School. "It's clear that

"Based on this positive response, we are already planning several information sessions for the spring," said Beverly Mouradjian, Assistant Director for Corporate Training. "We're looking forward to letting even more people know all that Bryant College has to offer."

Forum seen as success

Last night, the much awaited political forum--with candidates ranging from Robert Healey of the Cool Moose Party to Jack Reed of the Democratic Party--was held in the Bryant Center from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m. With the main concern being the upcoming election, this gave the candidates an open door to addressing the youth, as well as giving the students one of their first exposures to a wide variety of political parties and candidates in Rhode Island.

Politicians on hand educated Bryant students and others with their views and stance on several issues. The main issues of the night appeared to be educational funding (at the higher education level), the social security tax, and term limits.

Seeing as how this will be the first time most students will be voting in a presidential race, many students attended and asked pertinent questions to their own lives. The representatives from both the Democratic and Republican parties were specific about their own goals, while representatives from third parties such as the Libertarian, Green, Cool Moose, and Reform parties were more focused on getting their overall stance communicated to the public.

Child causes blaze

A 9-year-old boy is charged with setting a spectacular fire at a vacant factory building that quickly spread to nearby multifamily homes, leaving nearly 100 people homeless.

The boy climbed a fire escape to enter the former American Tubing and Webbing Co. plant and lit papers in several spots, sparking a blaze so intense its heat alone ignited four nearby houses, Mayor Vincent Cianci Jr. said at a news conference late Tuesday night.

Remarkably, no one was hurt. One firefighter was treated for dehydration.

The boy was standing in the crowd surrounding the fire when a patrolman seeking witnesses said he made "incriminating statements" and then confessed, Cianci said.

The boy was with his mother at the time and lives near the neighborhood where the fire started, Cianci said.

No further details of his arrest were released.

The fire started shortly before 5:45 p.m. in the five-story brick building near Bishop McViney Regional Elementary School that stretches the length of a block on Gordon Avenue in South Providence. Within an hour the building was gutted and four nearby multifamily homes burned.

The fire spread quickly because the timbers inside the old factory were soaked with oil from years of industrial use, Battalion Chief Joe Scolardi said. Steel floor supports melted from the heat.

"It was like opening an oven door," Scolardi said.

Residents were evacuated and streets closed. Flames shot high into the air and were visible from Interstates 95 and 195, where the afternoon commute slowed to a crawl as motorists gawked.

Joe Collins, who has lived in the neighborhood since 1972, said he owns three homes that were destroyed. As he spoke, his fiancée, Karen Garnett, cried on his shoulder.

One firefighter who was among the first on the scene and did not give his name said he had to leave the building as soon as he entered because the heat was so intense.

A shower of embers fell onto the surrounding neighborhood of multifamily homes and abandoned buildings, and soot covered cars and trees. In addition to the four homes that were destroyed, several others suffered minor damage.

Rosa Jackson, a neighborhood resident, said she looked down Gordon Avenue from about two blocks away and was shocked by the sight.

As the fire burned, Collins watched virtually everything he owned go up in flames. He said he has no homeowner's insurance.

The fire was brought under control about 8 p.m.

American Tubing and Webbing manufactured glass tubing and wicks for oil stoves starting in the late 1880s, and at one time made silk and elastic garters, but its plant was vacant in recent years, Cianci said.

The building was sold months ago after a previous owner failed to pay $111,000 in taxes, but officials did not immediately know the name of the new owners, Cianci said.

Displaced families were being cared for by the Red Cross and city officials. About 60 children and 40 adults were left homeless by the blaze, Cianci said.

A representative from Bermuda was one of many to host a table at ISO's first United Nations Festival this past weekend. See page 6 for more photos.

Sharing electrons

Registration time is here; the much awaited time of year when you plan out your spring schedule has finally arrived. This will be the first time registering for many of the freshmen out there and the last time for a lot of the seniors; how exciting for both groups. Now is the time to get the low-down on the classes, teachers, and times offered from your peers and academic advisors. Regardless of your registration number, this is something that really should not be taken lightly; your decisions now will rule your life for the entirety of next semester (you know this already). When deciding your schedule, be sure to make adequate time for studying, working, eating, sleeping, and traveling. A schedule which exists on only Mondays and Wednesdays (is this possible?) looks really nice on paper, but when it comes to exam time (especially midterms) this type of arrangement can prove to be rather difficult. Understand your own limits and avoid overexerting yourself.

In choosing extracurricular activities, be sure not to take on too much responsibility at one time (there is certainly a lot of opportunities available). Some people out there can handle multiple tasks very well, but if you have previous responsibilities, be sure to avoid doing everything yourself. Having a nice resume is fine and dandy, but too many activities can be detrimental to your GPA, which should be your main purpose for even being here. Let your superiors (bosses and other people whom you must answer to) know of your time constraints, etc.; letting them know your own situation gives them a better perspective of where you are coming from. If your grades are going down the tubes (because of other obligations), now is the time to admit to yourself that you need to rearrange your schedule. It is better to give up nonacademic activities and regain stature within the classroom when you have the chance; the loss of ego suffered when someone else admits your defeat for you is a much worse feeling than the admittance of self-defeat to yourself. Efficiency is our main goal in life, but aiming too high often produces a subpar result.

Also, don't be afraid to ask for help. Humans working together produce a synergistic effect (McNally 10/23); others out there may have already experienced something similar to a present factor in your life, and their advice might encompass other factors which you never considered. Getting advice is not succumbing and shouldn't be looked upon as a very last resort to solving a problem.

So go out there and break a pencil; choose classes which interest you and meet your degree requirements. Heck, be a little gutsy and take a Saturday class. Don't be afraid to ask other students for their opinions on a class. See the professors themselves to get an idea of who you'd like instructing you in a particular course. If you have a really high registration number, don't fear; add-drop can be the savior in your life next semester. Have fun.

Darwin disproved at Bryant

The faculty and administration here at Bryant have done something amazing: They have disproved one of the most well known theories ever. Charles Darwin concluded that only the strong will survive. Yet at this fine institution for business education there are so many weak (primarily core business) courses, such as Mgt. Theory, CIS, MIS, BU400, and POM, which have survived for too long. The courses themselves are not necessarily the problem, at least not in intent. Rather the problem lies in their being so corrupted with technology that is out of date, terminology which is unnecessary, and other forms of busy work, that they are no longer of service to the student. Too many students wonder, "Why did I bother coming to class today?" and, what's worse, too many of us seniors wonder, "Why did I bother coming to Bryant?" I realize this problem is not unique to Bryant. Actually, it, like many other problems here, is shared by several other colleges and universities.

I alluded that in theory some of these classes have potential to be something more than pointless. In part I feel that a course not reaching its potential is the fault of the instructor. Instructors who, due to their tenure, have become complacent and lost the initiative to change the curriculum and actually provide a "real world" education. Instead they keep on providing a theoretical, virtual-education, full of mumbo-jumbo which the students have long forgotten by graduation day. I also feel that it is in part the academic administration's fault for not fulfilling their commitment to the consumers (a.k.a. students) by ensuring a proper and practical education via a stronger and more relevant curriculum (excluding Pres. Machtley, who has the potential to turn this problem around). I would be a fool not to mention the student body's guilt, too. We, over the years, have learned to "beat the system" and give the teachers of these courses what they want, not really caring about the education itself. But who can blame us; if we are to succeed in the business world, we will have to grasp all the opportunities we are presented with.

The college does recognize several of the problems it faces; why else would the administration pay several thousand dollars to answer the question, "Who are we?" By the way, had I been consulted, I would have suggested the question, "Why don't the students like who we are?" instead. I will be graduating this May, and, looking back on those classes, I begin to answer my own question as to why I do not feel I have received a proper business education here. I feel that the solution involves more practical, not harder, course work.

On that note, I have a challenge for the faculty and administration: Create an institution which provides a valuable education. To do this, the administration is going to have to do their part by requiring some members of the faculty to change their stagnant curriculums and following through with changes suggested by student surveys and the like. Because the tenure system is unfortunately here to stay, the administration will have to be creative in developing a method of controlling faculty performance.

The faculty, on the other hand, is going to have to conquer the effects of tenure, and will have to lift their eyes up from the text book to see the world around them. Furthermore, the faculty will have to get over the feeling that 'the students do not care' and make us care. After all, some of us will hopefully be successful business people someday, and if you want a donation for your precious endowment, you are going to have to earn it.

I have brought my concerns to the administration before, only to get the run around. Meeting with several department chairs, I was turned over to other officials, who then told me it was an issue to be taken up with the professors themselves. So if any members of the faculty or administration would like to meet with me to further discuss my concerns, feel free to call me. I'm in the book.

PUBLIC SAFETY

BEAT

Compiled by Keith Williams
Department of Public Safety

Fire Alarm- True

October 14, 1996- Public Safety responded to someone's residence to check on a report of a toaster oven on fire. Upon arrival the students had already put out the fire with their fire extinguisher. The fire started when the student was trying to toast an english muffin and the grease in the "drippan" of the toaster oven caught fire. No one was hurt in this incident, and all units were shortly cleared.

Alcohol Violation

October 14, 1996- DPS went to a particular residence to fill a report of a vehicle being vandalized. Upon arrival, DPS noticed a keg in plain view. The keg was confiscated and destroyed. The students were cooperative in this matter. Charges have been filed.

Lost/Stolen License Plate

October 14, 1996- A student came into DPS to report that a license plate was missing from his vehicle. A report was filed and student was advised to file a report with the police.

Vandalism

October 14, 1996- A student residing in the Townhouse Village reported that somebody spray painted on the brick wall at the entrance to the townhouse. A report was filed, and maintenance was contacted to attempt to remove the paint.

Larceny

October 14, 1996- Two students were arrested and charged with larceny under $500 as a result of an investigation conducted by DPS. Campus charges have been filed on both students, who were released from police custody with a summons to appear in court.

Vandalism

October 19, 1996- A student came back to her residence and noticed that eggs were thrown all over the room. There are no suspects nor witnesses at this time.

Theft

October 18, 1996- A student notified DPS that their wallet was stolen from their room. There is still an investigation in this incident.

Alcohol Violation

October 18, 1996- A student was seen carrying a keg towards their residence. The keg was confiscated and destroyed. Charges were filed.

Fire alarm- False

October 19, 1996- DPS was dispatched to Hall 4 for an activated fire alarm. The cause of the alarm was a malfunctioning heat sensor. The unit was replaced and all units were cleared.

Disturbance

October 18, 1996- DPS responded to a fight in someone's residence involving four individuals. No one was seriously injured. Two of the females were visitors and were escorted off campus. No one wanted to involve SPD. Charges were filed on campus.

Vandalism

October 18, 1996- A student's vehicle was vandalized in the Hall 16 parking lot. The vehicle's antenna was bent. DPS is investigating this matter.

Vandalism

October 18, 1996- A student reported to DPS that someone smashed eggs inside their townhouse. The interior of the unit had to be cleaned. DPS is investigating.

Alcohol Violation

October 19, 1996- Two students were seen attempting to unload a large amount of beer from a vehicle. Both were 21, and each was given the choice to keep one case of beer or the one bottle of liquor. Both chose to keep one case of beer. A total of eight cases of beer and one bottle of liquor were confiscated and destroyed. Charges were filed.

Vandalism/Disorderly Conduct

October 19, 1996- Three students were seen attempting to pull down a light pole in the old townhouses. They saw DPS and began to run. One student, who was intoxicated, was caught and became disorderly and abusive. SPD responded and arrested the subject. Needless to say, on campus charges were also filed.

Dissection not for everyone

Approximately seven million vertebrate animals are killed each year for dissection in US biology classrooms. To illustrate the magnitude of this many animals, consider that if you lined them all up end to end, they would stretch more than twice the length of California.

And for what purpose? What gains are made when students cut open and explore the insides of frogs and cats and fetal pigs and dogfish sharks? The Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) believes that whatever benefits might arise from dissections, they are far outweighed by the associated costs. Allow me to explain.

First, there is the animal suffering involved. Investigations into the dissection trade have been documented; among other abuses, cats being drowned ten at a time in burlap sacks or prodded roughly into crowded gas chambers, rats embalmed with formaldehyde while still living, dozens of live frogs piled into sacks for days or weeks without food, and sickly turtles kept in filthy, overcrowded holding tanks. These sorts of conditions appear to be quite commonplace, and though they are inexcusable and sometimes illegal, they are perhaps not surprising in a business where the "merchandise" is going to end up dead anyway.

Then there are human social concerns. A principal goal of life science education is to teach respect for life. Dissection is an intrinsically violent exercise; it involves killing, preserving, cutting apart, then discarding an animal. However well-intentioned an instructor's desire to teach respect for animals, the typical dissection exercise will tend to undermine it by devaluing the lives of other creatures to the level of expendable objects.

I have personally spoken with hundreds of bright, compassionate students who find dissection ethically repugnant; their response is sometimes to turn away from careers in such fields as human medicine, veterinary medicine, or nursing, where compassion is most needed. On the other hand, less sensitive students may be hardened by the exercise, the consequences of which are open to speculation.

There is also quality of education to be considered. Teachers who continue to use animals in dissections or other invasive classroom exercises are apparently unaware of or unmoved by the fact that more than a dozen studies have been published showing that students using humane alternatives learn anatomy and physiology as well as or better than students who use animals (the HSUS will provide an annotated list of these studies to anyone who requests it). Abundant resources are available for teaching anatomy, physiology, genetics, toxicology, and other animal-related fields that do not require animals to suffer and/or die. These include films, computer simulations, models, books, or a trip to the local veterinary clinic. To anyone who simply cannot bear the thought of dispensing with hands-on contact with a preserved animal, human cadavers offer the full-scale experience without the associated ethical problems (people are not killed for the purpose of dissection; the patient voluntarily donates his/her body).

Even the economics of dissection do not argue for its use. The HSUS recently did a cost comparison and found that, for all five species we looked at (shark, frog, rat, pig, cat), the cost of purchasing a broad range of alternative materials was lower than that of purchasing animals to dissect. For 270 students (two students per animal) over a three year period, money saved ranged from $344 (bullfrogs) to $4,342 (cats). If you want to save even more money, just borrow the alternative. The HSUS, for instance, operates an Alternatives Loan Program that currently has over forty items available on a temporary, free-of-charge basis.

Finally, there is environmental protection. Many of the animals harmed or killed for classroom use are caught in the wild. Populations of frogs and sharks, for instance, have been seriously declining in recent years, and while the specific impact of their capture for classroom use is not known, it is certainly not ecologically beneficial. Moreover, the world needs people who value environmental stewardship and compassion for life; dissection fosters neither.

Perhaps there are a few fields, such as veterinary medicine, for which cutting open and examining the insides of dead animals is indispensable. But how ironic that healthy animals would be killed for students whose professional goal is to save lives and ease suffering. Even vet schools don't need to deliberately kill animals to train their students.

Conducting spay/neuter surgeries on animals from the animal shelters, and procuring deceased cats and dogs from their owners who sign a consent form are among the ethical ways that growing numbers of vet schools are procuring animals for their training programs. And as for the use of animals in medical school, consider that 27 of the nation's medical programs don't use animals in their curricula, and at all but one of the remaining schools, the animal labs are optional. Using animals to practice surgery has been illegal in England for more than 100 years.

With all the suffering in the world, should we really be adding to it in our education programs? Is dissection necessary when other teaming methods have been shown repeatedly to effectively replace it? Is there any justification for animal dissection when it has so many counts—animal killing, animal suffering, violation of students' sensibilities, mediocre educational merit, and environmental disruption—against it? We think not.

Curfew smurfew

Myron Gorham
Archway Staff Writer

In one of the lamest and most blatant disregard for the rights of the young, our government seems to be gearing strongly towards imposing curfews on our youth. Many states have already imposed them and many others are currently considering following suit along with the federal government's talk about a national curfew. Now this is obviously absurd, but our government states their reason to be curbing teenage crime as well as protecting our kids from the crime that is being committed at night. But what it really is is our government trying to control, once again, the lives of citizens of this country (children, the easiest target of all). The government needs to solve the problems of society instead of merely taming them.

Basically, what curfews do is prevent many teens from having the chance to commit a crime, at least at night. If you don't have the opportunity, you can't be out there doing anything wrong. Though many might argue that the bad kids are going to be out regardless, they still will be picked-up (violently, like criminals) and taken to some community center or another. This gives them bragging rights to claim that teenage crime is down significantly in their state and/or city. Violating the rights of children just to be able to put up the pretense that the problem has been solved and to receive applause for that pretense is rather selfish.

The question is: Is it ever right to punish the whole for a few? Because some teenagers are bad seeds and get-off, for some reason or another, on causing damage, trouble, and mayhem, that is no grounds to punish all teenagers. This is something that would never have even been thought about for a milli-second if children had the right to vote. I'm sure that all these adults who support curfews and do have the right to vote would be enraged if the government even began to utter, for a second, about putting a curfew on adults; they become hypocrites when they happily support the same thing happening for the youth.

Curfews are further substantiated by the argument that it will keep our kids safe. Now that's a smelly load of crap. In a society where many schools aren't even safe for our children, restricting their freedom to enjoy themselves while they still can doesn't make them more or less safe. What the government needs to do is solve the crime problem and make both the streets and the schools safe. Curfews just removes opportunity, which deters crime, but only by caging kids up in their homes. This is a free country, is it not? The only reason curfews seem to work is that kids are required to go to school in the daytime, so they're not in a position to commit crime at that time, and at night, they have to adhere to a curfew, again removing opportunity.

Many people, including the President, have talked about, time and again, how, when they were young, they had to be in when the street lights came on and how if they weren't, their parents were waiting at home with punishment. They must realize that this isn't when they were young. If their parents didn't trust them enough to let them stay out late and/or didn't think they were responsible enough to stay out late, do their homework and chores, and come in at a time in which they knew they had to, and/or to stay out of trouble and have nice clean fun, that's them. If today's parents trust their children to do this, the government has no right to degrade that trust in any way. It violates both the parent's rights as a parent, and the child's right as a citizen of this country.

Parents are the only people who have the right to set curfews; the government has no right at all. If parents don't want their kids out at night, they can put a curfew on their child and enforce it as strictly as they want. Unless the government can undeniably prove that awarding a child freedom to live and enjoy their youth is directly detrimental to a child's growth, development, and/or well being, they have no right to stick their noses into matters that they have no true jurisdiction over.

Many would argue that it does concern them; these kids are out committing crimes against them and they have a right to protect themselves. These people are labeling all kids as potential criminals without just cause. Just because a few go out and engage in wrongdoing, all must be treated like potential criminals. Yet again, hypocritical. Adults commit crimes all the time, does that mean that all adults should be treated like potential criminals? And, of course, there is a possibility that anyone could and would commit a crime, but that don't mean you must treat them as soon-to-be criminals and punish them in advance.

Appalling is not quite the word to describe these parents out here who so willingly accept their kids' rights being violated; more like repulsively despicable. Even if these parents agree with the idea of curfews, they shouldn't agree with the government's violation of their kids' rights. They should use the voting power kept from their children to fight the government and make it known that their kids rights can't be over-looked just because they don't personally have the right to vote. Kids can only, pretty much, depend on their parents (and a few children advocacy groups) to protect them from the government, and today, these parents are letting their kids down.

The simple fact is that curfews are wrong and the government, as well as every other citizen of this country, knows this. The government just sees an easy way to claim to put a dent in crime. Since so many adults seem to agree with them, here is a way to virtually drive crime to extinction: If they put a curfew on adults, the adult crime rate would drop just like teen crime. But why stop there? If they prohibit anyone from ever leaving their homes altogether, crime will quickly wither away. Sure, there would be those who leave their homes anyway, but they would be easily caught by the only people allowed out, the police. Of course, no one else but the police would be able to go to work. The family will die off too, unless families resort to incest, and the government would somehow have to feed every citizen, for they would be imprisoned in their own homes.

Sure, the rights of every citizen would be violated and this country would go down the tubes in no time, but at least there would be no more crime. That is, until we're taken-over by another country.

Bryant senior poised for Hong Kong's transformation in June of 1997

Eric R. Handa

This coming spring in 1997, Bryant Senior Eric Handa will be partaking in history. The economics major from Bridgewater, NJ, will be attending a very unique program at the University of Hong Kong. The study abroad semester consists of four academic modules: Module A: Twenty-three day traveling seminar to Taiwan and all of mainland China; Module B: Nine weeks of intensive classroom instruction taught by visiting American professors and regional Asian professors; Module C: Five week supervised internship with a multinational corporation based in Hong Kong; Module D: One week summary symposium and project presentations from the traveling seminar will witness the official signing ceremony between the United Kingdom and China.

The senior's interest in British-Sino relations was sparked when studying abroad this past spring semester in London, United Kingdom. Eric took a class on Economic and Business Development in East Asia taught by an expert professor. "I really became interested in how the Hong Kong scenario was going to be played out in 1997. The US has a lot at stake in the region, specifically in Hong Kong where 37,000 Americans are currently living and US business has 87 billion dollars in foreign direct investment (FDI)." After returning from the United Kingdom, Handa contacted, Dr. Bill Hill, Bryant's Director of International Programs Abroad. "He recommended to me Syracuse University, which sponsors the program in Hong Kong."

After being accepted into the program in early fall, Eric contacted Bryant Economics Professor and Sarkisian Chair Dr. Pat Norton. "Dr. Norton and I formulated my economics seminar focusing on the economic, business, and political ramifications that will surround Hong Kong going back to China in June of 1997." Hong Kong has been promised fifty years of a high degree of autonomy from the June date. Eric explains, "Dr. Norton and I are exploring the possible scenarios in-depth; from giving presentations, research, and constructing my thesis, we are predicting that Hong Kong will flourish even greater economically and will take on a more Singaporean style of government."

The senior, who has received a partial Syracuse University scholarship and grant for the Hong Kong program, has traveled to 44 countries in his three years at Bryant, and offers some advice for those interested in studying abroad or a career in the international spectrum. "Don't let the fallacy of cost affect your decision not to go; scholarships, tuition differential grants, and institutional grants are available through most programs." Eric reiterates, "If you are a qualified student, there is no reason you can't have the opportunity to partake in a program anywhere in the world-if you are willing to work at finding the right program that fits your needs."

What will happen in Hong Kong after June 1997? Eric conceded, "Who knows?" Only time will tell as the June date approaches closer. Eric will be providing the Bryant community with news reports in The Archway while in Hong Kong next semester-the year of transition.

Eric Handa is one of the many students studying abroad next semester. Hong Kong will be his destination.

Pre-Reg opportunites

Thanks to Undergraduate Programs for this week's question, "What are my options for Science programs at Bryant?"

Pre-reg is always an exciting time; for students, the apprehension of a lousy lottery pick, for Science and Technology faculty, the question "will any of my elective courses run?" Every semester I propose that the lowest five birthdays throw a pity party for the highest five birthdays and get poned by them, but, so far, no action.

Students, we can help each other! No matter how high your lottery number, there's always room in the upper level elective science courses that lead to a minor. With approximately seven students in each of our two programs, Biotechnology and Environmental Science, you could join an elite group on campus, work hard to meet the challenge of our course requirements, and graduate a better person for your time and effort. Though you may be unaware that both Biotechnology and Environmental Science are active, growing business areas with a strong presence in the Northeast, the vigor, erudition, and fashion sense of our science faculty should draw you in our direction.

So...here's the plan. Come to the science and technology area, rooms 376-381, on Thursday, October 31 between 4:30 and 6:00 p.m. Eat comestibles, drink potables, and revel in the sub benthic intellectual atmosphere. Play with our computers (best in the school), meet the fish, the skeleton (a 1st year student who avoided Salman-son too long) and Hemp Dogbane, and handle DNA and bacteria. There's no finer time to be had under this leaky roof.

(Enigma is a weekly column in which our science faculty tackle the technological riddles of life. If sufficient loyal Archway readers submit topics that we feature in the column, they will be eligible for a drawing worth 25 dollars in points. Submit questions to Dave Betsch, C223 and look for the answers right here in the coming weeks.)

Coffee talk

Coffee Talk is a program that was developed by BACCHUS to provide support and comfort to the freshmen class. It is designed to let freshmen know that they are not alone in the experiences that they are going through. The upperclassmen have been through the experiences and are an excellent source to help get through them.

Every Tuesday night at 9:30 p.m., in the lobby of Hall 15, upperclassmen and freshmen gather to share free coffee from The Junction, meet new people, and discuss the topic of the evening. The program has been extremely successful with regular and new participants each week.

Some of the topics and activities done in the past are as follows:

Homesickness:

- Introduced self
- Discussed concerns about leaving home
- Wrote down confidential concerns which will be returned at the end of the year

Alcohol:

- Played Alcohol Jeopardy
- Prizes were awarded

Stress:

- Discussed upcoming tests,

homework and classes

- Time management- filled out scheduling sheets
- Made Stress Balls

Respect:

- Gathering of people concerned about respect and living conditions

- Discussed noise, room-mates, bathroom uncleanness and general rudeness

- Made signs to post, which actually reduced disrespect (nice job)

Relationships:

- Scoop 101- Guys and girls split up to come up with questions or comments about the opposite sex that they wanted answered

- Created great discussion on learning, finding out "the truth", and bonding

Coffee Talk encourages everyone and anyone to attend. Upperclassmen are asked to come and share experiences or any helpful hints that you wish you knew when you were a freshman.

Next week's topic (October 29)- Nutrition and Eating Disorders

Free Coffee, Free Food, Free Friends

Coffee Talk: Tuesdays 9:30 p.m., Hall 15 Lobby.

The Mad Sage takes a bath

Myron Gorham
Archway Staff Writer

Lost in the freedom of nature, he decided to rest under a blooming tree. His odor didn't phase the surrounding animals adversely; matter of fact, it seemed to draw them to him. His smell to them was that of apple pie. It lured them in, and they saw him as one of them: a wild animal. It was twilight, and the sun was wavering above the tall trees as if they were infected with life. Mating calls of those who wandered without chains echoed throughout the forest. And, as he opened his eyes for the very first time, he saw the most beautiful waterfall. It was like it just suddenly and mysteriously appeared.

The sound of the running water was taunting him; daring him to clench the thrust of his unbathed body. He could almost hear the water whispering to him.

"You have established your smell, now you must promote it. And the only way to do that is to coat it with society's smell. You must merge the two smells into one; then, and only then, will your smell be truly taken in."

He looked at the animals around him and took in their smell. It was of his smell. They had taken his smell in only because it complimented their own. He realized that he is human and plan to live among other humans, not animals. He looked at the waterfall questionably. He expected an answer, and soon one came.

"Yes, you are of the beast. That wolf, rabbit, deer, robin, and panther about you have become one with you and, thus, one with each other, despite their predatory conflicts. But your desire is not to be beast, but man. You must make your smell of man."

"But that would be conforming to everyone else's vision of what my life should be. I did that before. I will not revert back into that once again." He refused the reason of the waterfall.

He then dismissed the waterfall and got some sleep. When he woke up, he was surround by animals who came to join him in his slumber. He was the only human. He realized that he would never be accepted by man as long as his smell, which he was proud of, was of the beast. But he would never conform to others again, even if that meant becoming of the beast permanently.

"No need. You need not conform, you need only incorporate. Give up nothing, but as you expect others to take in your smell, you must too take in theirs. And when you take in each others' smells, a new one is made, one which you all can stand."

He realized that the waterfall was right and quickly took off all his clothes and dove in. After, too, washing his clothes he realized how good it was to take a bath.

Six Encounters With A Wise Man

"Like fate, each man controls what will become of tomorrow."

"Like hidden treasure, most people bury the most priceless part of themselves in the sand."

"Hell only exist because Heaven refused to destroy it."

"Only when you remove the shades can you truly enjoy the beauty of the rainbow."

"He who walks a straight line often falls before reaching the other side."

"He who ignores the whispers of the devil on his left shoulder is often doomed to carry-out it's wishes."

How to attract the opposite sex:

Sorry about that but I wanted to get your attention. If you still want to learn how to attract the opposite sex check out the bottom of the page.

This week there are a bunch of good movies out there for you to see. Of course that depends on who you are and what you find entertaining. I have tried over the last couple of semesters to differentiate between types of movies and genre's and so on. In many ways movies are like food. Sometimes you want food that tastes good - what tastes good differs from person to person and this can either be salty or sweet. Other times you want something that is good for you - Fat free, low cholesterol and easily digestible etc. And sometimes you want both. Something that taste's good is good for you and makes you appreciate life and everything around you. There are critics out there who have seen so many movies that they have crossed into a different plane a just simply will not return. Critic's who cannot seem to understand the sheer joy of mindless, pointless, cinematic chaff that is the celluloid equivalent of the Twinkie. Some argue that if producers feed the masses with nothing more than beer, Twinkies and bar nuts of film, eventually we will have a society of cinematic Norm Peterson's (obscure television - Cheers - reference). These are the critics that pan every Hollywood made movie and can't get enough independent films at the Carne Film Festival. Critics like these use the words, "surrealistic cinematography" alot, they like to quote Kafka while looking at the movie from an Orwellian

1984 point of view and cry alot at poetry readings. These critics are suggesting that we eat nothing but cinematic rice cakes. They suck and therefore should have their property seized and be run out of town. They however may have a point. I believe that my generation's attention span and appreciation of beauty in film, is slowly eroding like the enamel on the teeth of a teenage Bulimic with a passive aggressive mom and a control freak dad. Yesterday I went to watch Les Miserable, the Victor Hugo classic. This musical is critically acclaimed, long running in all the cultural centers of the world, a box office smash and a fantastic piece of storytelling. Throughout the play I found my attention wandering. During an emotional death scene, much to my deep shame I found myself thinking, "will you go ahead and die already!" Maybe this behavior is a evolutionary response to a world that is by all accounts speeding up. If you aren't able to grasp the facts quickly, you go the way of the Dodo. Maybe it is the way in which we are given everything else in a readers digest fashion that is causing this zeitgeist of inattention. Whatever it is I just hope that it can be stopped. Even though I regularly took attention breaks from action to calculate in my head the approximate distance between me and the ground floor, I know the play is an amazing piece of work. I just want to ask that we as students all try to get something better into our entertainment diet. Something that takes the time to build an intricate tapestry of characters and emotions, blended with heart stopping music, superb writing and grand production all taking place in an architectural masterpiece. Put down the bowl of chocolate frosted marshmallow sugar bombs and try a piece of fruit. Not just any fruit something exotic. So, while you are considering Steven Seagals mile a minute kick-ass "Glimmer Man" or Geena Davis' Flash bang, explosion a second, "The long Kiss Goodnight", think about Les Misreble's at the Providence Performing Arts or Sylvia now playing at the Trinity Repertory. If that's not convincing enough how about the reader's digest version.

For you guy's, women think it's romantic, especially when coupled with a dinner in a swanky restaurant. When there's romance in the air, who knows what might happen. And for you lady's, the really cute guy's with taste, money, and the ability to listen to, share and handle deeper emotions, can be found here. Hey, I know that it's a play on your emotions, but whatever it takes to get your attention.

International flavor

Over the past ten years, many at Bryant have heard the term "internationalization" mentioned time and time again, but what exactly does that mean, and how will Bryant be different after becoming internationalized?

On Saturday of Parents' Weekend, the International Students' Organization, with the generous financial and emotional support of many individuals and organizations, held the first annual United Nations Festival. The Festival was a wonderful collaboration of exhibits representing the many cultures of our students and faculty, complete with food vendors, a fashion show, and entertainment. Those of you who weren't in attendance missed a great program.

This program was particularly important, as Bryant seeks to help every one of our students develop a truly global world view. You see, New York is not the financial and cultural center of the universe; nor are New Delhi, Shanghai, Lisbon, Rio De Janeiro or Tokyo. It is the connections between and among these great cities that make up the financial and cultural world. I tell students frequently, that whether they work in Manhattan or rural Iowa, their work and their business will depend on international connections. Whether people from other countries are their customers, suppliers, or simply their co-workers in a multinational corporation, connections to the global marketplace will become increasingly important for successful enterprises. To help all members of our community understand this will take more than simply admitting more international students or hiring more faculty with international backgrounds. In fact, we want our domestic students and our international students not only to be acquainted with students from other countries, but to have a sense of how successful relationships - both personal and professional - are formed and nurtured throughout the world. To accomplish this, we will have to continue encouraging American students to get to know our international students, and to encourage our international students to get to know our American students. If this sounds like a different Bryant than you're accustomed to, you're right. I am seeking nothing less than the transformation of Bryant College into an institution in which we all can expect to encounter people who are profoundly different from us, yet we will be capable of understanding how they view themselves and their world.

From My Corner

F.J. Talley

Being part of an internationalized campus doesn't mean we think that Americans are wrong and international students are right, and it doesn't mean that we believe that international students who don't do everything American students do aren't playing by the rules. An internationalized campus implies that all of us will take the risks of trying to understand the world views of other people - whether those people are from India or Panama or Connecticut. It means that we will embrace transformation and be unafraid of it. In short, it means that we will have a profoundly different Bryant College - yet still one of which we can be proud.

Many students gather around the Japan table at the United Nations Festival this past weekend.

10 questions: An interview with Kate E. Beckman

Kenneth Wakefield
Archway Staff Writer

Kate is a Junior and an R.A. in residence hall 16. She has also been involved in the Bryant Marketing Association and Big Sisters of Bryant.

Ken Wakefield: When did you first notice your leadership skills?

Kate Beckman: I first started noticing them in my freshman year of high school. There was this program in my school known as Peer Leadership; I ran for and won a position on the Electoral Board. This led to my involvement in the Cape Cod Youth Council.

K.W.: What is the most important event you have ever had in your life where you needed to use your leadership skills?

K.B.: I feel that one of the biggest events in my life so far is Big Sisters. When you see how happy you make the children of Smithfield, it makes it all worth the effort.

K.W.: What do you feel is the most important thing you do right now, where your leadership skills are needed to be used effectively?

K.B.: That would definitely be my R.A. position. I have to use leadership in every aspect, ranging from things like having floor meetings to rushing to get everything ready for the night in the gym.

K.W.: What are some of the leadership qualities that are needed to be an R.A.?

K.B.: The ability to speak effectively and articulately is an important one, along with the ability to build trust with my residents and staff. I have to be able to trust them and want them to trust me.

K.W.: What are some of the ways that you improve your leadership qualities?

K.B.: Practice. Every time I speak in public, I get better at it; the more times I face a confrontation, the better my leadership skills become. I have to be self motivated, willing to take on responsibility.

K.W.: How do you feel being a student leader has affected your life?

K.B.: I think it helped me get a lot more involved with the activities available on campus. It has given me more confidence in the things that I try to accomplish.

K.W.: Do you feel that Bryant has had any effect on your becoming a student leader?

K.B.: It did not start my skills, but it definitely helped them progress in the right direction. If I was at a larger college or university, I don't think I would have had the chances to get involved that I have had here.

K.W.: As a student leader at Bryant, what are some of the things that you would like to see changed?

K.B.: I would like more people to become involved on campus. Do not be intimidated from doing what you want.

K.W.: What message would you give to potential leaders?

K.B.: Don't be afraid to get involved and make sure you speak your mind. Don't be afraid of what others might think about you. Stand up for what you believe in; the more you put in the more you get out.

K.W.: Who is the person that you admire the most and why?

K.B.: My mother. I admire her for all the hard work she put into everything she ever did. She raised my sister and I as a single parent, graduated from Harvard with a Master's degree, and counsels patients - many of whom don't pull through. When I see all the hard work that she puts into everything she does, it just builds my admiration for her more and more.

'Tis the Season...

The season of the Jewish holidays has concluded. Even so, another new beginning has been marked with celebration. At the very end of the holiday season, Jews begin the reading of the Torah again. This week we are in the portion called "Lech L'cha," in which Abram (later, Abraham) leaves his home to make a new beginning for himself and to inaugurate a promising future.

I have always admired the courage of Abraham. According to the narrative, he was already advanced in years when he was prompted to leave his home. He had "made it" in life, if he had wanted to consider it so; and he actually left Ur-of-the-Chaldees with considerable material wealth. While he had achieved much in his life, it was not enough for Abram; he wanted also to achieve much with his life. To the extent that material possessions could give him satisfaction at all, they were not enough. He wanted his life to have meaning beyond itself; and in so desiring and moving with that desire, he left his mark upon history.

No wonder that the Jewish sages seldom speak of "reading" Torah, but rather of "learning" Torah. More than words on a page or, traditionally speaking, on a scroll of parchment, the Torah contains lessons in living. Abraham's legacy of courage and dedication, to a larger purpose endures because in a sense we are his future; we renew ourselves, as we renew our cycle of Torah from year-to-year.

Our new year is unfolding quickly at Bryant, and I look forward to meeting you. I am usually on campus Wednesday afternoons in the Campus Ministry office, or you can call me at 232-6045 or 232-6119.

Smithfield Police sponsor MDA "Lock Up"

submitted by the Muscular Dystrophy Association

Over seventy business people throughout Smithfield have volunteered to be "locked up" by the Smithfield Police to benefit the Greater Rhode Island Muscular Dystrophy Association.

The Smithfield Police "Most Wanted Lock Up" will be held on Wednesday, October 23, at the Elks Lodge (Rt. 104) from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The "jailbirds" will be sentenced to an hour to raise bail in the form of pledges. Some of Smithfield's most notoriously nice citizens will be locked up including town officials, local industry leaders, and Bryant administrators and faculty.

This fund raiser would not have been possible without the support of Police Chief William McGarry and the assistance of Patrolman Richard St. Sauveur.

All monies raised are used to provide medical and support services to MDA clients and their families in Rhode Island, and Bristol County, Massachusetts.

BACCHUS

Leanna Mansour

Hello from BACCHUS! Just a reminder for those who forgot or those who are new to the school, BACCHUS stands for Boosting Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students.

Not much has been happening lately. Coffee Talk started successfully. Topics such as relationships, home sickness, and stress have been covered. Nutrition will be discussed at the next Coffee Talk. Feel free to join the discussion.

Trick-or-Treating for canned goods will be on Sunday, October 22, at 12:30 p.m. in the Rotunda for all those who wish to participate.

All those BACCHUS members who haven't chosen a date for low ropes, call Ky at 233-9544 as soon as possible. The dates are Friday, October 25; Friday, November 22; and Saturday, November 23.

Don't forget, the next meeting is on Wednesday, October 23, at 5:00 p.m. in room 2A of the Bryant Center. Hope to see you there!

What's up Bryant College! Parents' weekend went well, and we would like to thank everyone's parents who came down. The candle sale also went well, and, along with our advisor Dr. Doug Levin's help on Wednesday, we are making a good start on contributing to our philanthropy.

The mud bowl was fun, and now that we scored our first touchdown, we are favorites to take the whole thing. Veto will come out with next week's spreads on Monday. They might not be found in the Herald. Crane was impressive on his 21st birthday. He might have thought it was his 22nd, though. Alph modeled a new line of fancy clothing. Thanks Theta for an interesting time on Friday. Hey Keegan, can we hear some more childhood stories next Friday? Spalding was looking for a tips from Ragoo, but Ragoo was holding out on him. Maybe Ragoo wouldn't have held out on Mercedes.

The pet fly Peso is dead, funeral services will not happen due to the rain. Lewie took out the pinball machine at Parente's. Otis's parents grabbed dead beat parents of the week when they stood him up. Shep and Spalding went on a voyage Saturday night. Hey Colter and Nick, WHAT HAPPENED. Dan and Tommy were caught doing god knows what in hall 3. Sorry Darwin, I can't read a bloody word of your handwriting.

Quote of the week: "Medicine Ball!"

Bryan D. Magnus

Ah, we meet again, or maybe for the first time? Either way, I am glad you decided to further your education by reading our school newspaper. Every week The Archway is full of interesting articles about campus activities, world news, and so much more.

Despite the weather, I hope that everyone had a good parents' family weekend, or whatever they called it this year. I enjoyed the time with my family, and, if yours came up, I trust that your time together was memorable.

Well, our attendance is down from the days when we would exceed the fire safety limits in room 2B. However, we have been maintaining between 20 and 30 people at each meeting, which is good seeing as most of our efforts are turning towards winter activities and we really need the help. Thanks to all of you who are coming, and to those of you who aren't: "What's up with that?" Don't worry though, I too know how tough it is to remember to do all the things that have to get done in the day.

Hopefully we will see more of you today and future Thursdays in room 2B of the Bryant Center at 5

The Bryant Players

Meagan Mirkovich

Congratulations to both casts and the directors of the Parents' Weekend plays. They were a great success! Thanks to everyone who helped with the plays by working on the sets, costumes, and helping at the door.

In other news: Andrea and Erin got some interesting balloons during Parents' Weekend. Now what were they really supposed to be? The guys in J1 would like to send a special thank you out to Ken. Would you like a seat, Ken? Jay received the Academy Award for best director. We love you man! The makeup had an enjoyable evening with physical plant. Kelli, would you like an apple?

Hey Commuters! Here's a quick update about what's going on. Ellen has been elected to be the new vice president of our group. Daryll will become the historian. So with all the officers chosen, we are ready to do some major planning to make this our best year yet. Be sure to attend our next meeting being held on Wednesday, October 30. The meeting will be held on the third floor of the Bryant Center from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.. Of course pizza and soda will be provided. Topics of the meeting should include the planning of the trip to Boston in November. With Jessica and Mike driving, the bus ride alone should be an adventure. So be sure to sign up if you are interested. Also, a trip to New York is in the plans for December. Don't miss out on any of this or other important information; be at the meeting!

CAMPUS SCENE

Other things going on include our participation in the intramural volleyball games. They can best be summed up as we win some we lose some. It is finally here; Friday night is the big hayride and walk through the haunted forest. That's about all for now. Stop by the office and see us!

Delta Chi

James Dow

I would first like to congratulate our new associate members: Kyle, Quentin, John, Joe, Joel, Chris, Dave, Keith, Eric, Scott, Brian, Rob, Mike R., Jeff, Joel S., Mike S., & Duane. All the Brothers are behind you guys as you journey towards brotherhood.

Now onto the weekend re-cap. A thanks goes out to Phi-Sig for stopping by on Thursday Night at the townhouse. Parents' Weekend went well, as we hosted our annual reception for parents on our floor. Thanks to the "rough" suite for hosting Friday night. We were back on the floor for Saturday and finished what the parents didn't!!

Delta Chi Sports are going pretty well this season. Our A-Team won their last game convincingly over Phi-Kap 28-0. Great plays were turned in once again by the combo of Hollywood & Broadway. Our B-Team remained in a winning pace while posting a W over PKS-B last week. However, the B-Team suffered a loss of weight on the line, but the season goes on just the same.....

F-Sharp was again MIA this weekend; Shady!! Killer was tired of the mainstream weekends and took off to New York. Goose, Speakman, & Zippo leashes have been shortened and are not allowed to "roam" around the freshman dorms anymore. A belated congrats to JoBu and Ego for winning the tournament last weekend. Finally, I would like to congratulate all the pledges of all the Greek organizations and wish them luck. Hey P-Nut, remember you're my Happy Founders Day Everyone!! October 24, 1902. "94 years of tradition." Happy Birthday to Kristen Marie Hatch. You will always be in our hearts, Gizmo! We want to remind everyone to not drink and drive, even if it is just from down the street. Be careful!

Great job to Tyler and the rest of Senate on a fab Parents' Weekend!! Thanks to J2 for being such great hostesses! You guys did a good job!

On Friday, we had a very happy hour! Apollo is personally training anyone who wants to learn how to do her dance in the bathroom. Val thinks the foliage is awesome! Janna-did we mention that the three of us combined make the perfect woman? Pierce & Phoenix. Harley-you taught me everything I know-Apollo. Hey Dave Z., caught in a little uncomfy situation on Saturday night? Val and Silva. Thanks to Beta, we had a great time. A little wet, Gus?-McGee. Mattie and Silva want to know what FOB means? Parents' Night tonight! Come out and support Rhode Island's School for the Deaf. Happy 19th Birthday Apollo! Welcome Home Jimmy James!! You were missed! Quote of the week: "OH YES!" Silva.

The Entrepreneurship Club

Michael Tuttle

Hello to you all. First some old business: Last Wednesday, we had a meeting in which Dr. Peter Domalavage talked to us about technology in today's market. On Thursday, a bunch of us went to the Brown Venture Forum. It was very informative, and I suggest you go to the next Venture Forum. On Tuesday the 22, we held Entrepreneurship Day. It was very fun and informative. We had a large turnout. We heard from recent Bryant alumni, who told us about their own successes and failures in starting their own businesses. For those of you who missed it, you missed a great time.

Now to new business: On Saturday October 26, we will go on the Harvard trip. Only paid up members will be able to attend, so if you want to go, please contact one of the members of the e-board or send e-mail to entclub@acad.bryant.edu, and we will get back to you as soon as possible. We will be meeting at the circle at quarter to 8 in the morning, so be there if you want to go. Last year's trip was fun and informative and a good chance to do some networking. On Wednesday, October 30, we will be having our next meeting. It is at 4 p.m. with a room still to be determined. Our guest speaker will be Mr. Vascomcellas, who is in the technology industry. If you have any questions, comments, or concerns, please e-mail us at entclub@acad.bryant.edu.

The I.F.C. has been very busy as of late. Please keep posted for events taking place in your neck of the woods. Anyway, this Sunday, October 27, Greek Life will be sponsoring their annual Halloween Party for children of faculty and administration. Please RSVP as soon as possible; just call the Greek Life Office. All chapters will be attending and participating in this festive party; please join in the fun. Next Tuesday, October 29, there will be a Scholarship Seminar in Papitto at 5:30 p.m. We ask all chapter Presidents, Scholarship Chairs, and Membership Orientation Officers to participate. This will give all chapters a chance to improve their chapter's scholastic ability. Pizza and soda will be provided. Please come to listen and share your ideas. Anyone wishing to have their events posted in public, please see me; I will be glad to assist you. Until next time, see ya.

Pil Son! After a week of writer's block, I figured this would be a good time to write another article. Hopefully everyone's parents who came up for the weekend had a worthwhile trip. If they did not, they should have stopped by A3 on Saturday.

As usual, everyone did a great job in the demo. The whitebelts were especially impressive, since that was probably the first time they really performed in front of an audience. Hopefully this is an indicator of how the rest of the year will go.

We all wish Keith a belated congratulations on the performance at the tournament a couple weeks ago. Maybe, later more us will try and compete.

It seemed like everyone had a great time on Saturday night. It first seemed like we would be left with plenty of leftovers, but luckily the reserves showed up to give us a hand. Quote of the weekend: "Drink for making my mother drink." Until next time, BKKA!

Greetings and salutations to all. I hope everyone had an eventful week, I know I did. This week was rather exciting. I know everyone has been bogged down with work lately, but don't let it get the best of you. Lets see here... Thursday night not only was 21st birthday but also a great time. We partied with Theta, and that was hopping. Friday we partied with Tri-Sig, and that was out of control; Saturday with Tri-Sig was a blast as well. We had a lot of excitement making the preparations for Saturday night; you cannot stop us, you can only hope to contain us... In other news, Delaney polished off a bottle. The weekend was a blast. We played our Annual Game for the Lion on Saturday. It was a good time. Speaking of a good time, we would like to congratulate all of the new pledges of all of the sororities and fraternities. Good luck to you all. Up this weekend by popular demand were Wheeler, Eddie, and Burke. Thanks for the support. OK... Well, I'm very busy this week, so I'm going to have to keep it short... AND NOW coming straight out of our home office in Cleveland, Ohio... Composed with the assistance of Ryan Delaney..... TOP 10 reasons why the soda machines are always empty.....

10) They're slowly weaning us off of it; ever notice that they were empty for a week, then full, then empty for 2 weeks, then full, then empty for 3 weeks, then full, and then empty for a month and a half. That was their mistake; they jumped the gun, and this time we caught 'em.

9) Ever notice that they're Coke machines; maybe Pepsi is the choice of the next generation.

8) Conspiracy from the Bagel Wagon.

7) Now that everyone knows about the pool, they're taking all of the Cokes poolside.

6) Distribution shortage because they had to recall all of the white topped Cokes, and replace them with red caps.

5) That Wacky Coke Guy, always playing those practical jokes; he outs two bottles in every rack, and then fills the Diet Coke rack.

4) The official soft drink of the New England Patriots is Pepsi.

3) I'm now 21, so what do I care.

2) Government mind control. That means we have been bad; when we have been really bad, we get Diet Coke.

1) Sandy, manipulating the Information Highway to do his evil bidding, has apparently rerouted the trucking instructions to his room, in order that he can own all of the Cokes. Now if you want a Coke, you have to go to him. It's all about power...

Well, that's about all I can say. Once again, good luck to all of the new pledges of the Greek Community. And also (this goes for everyone), I don't know who said this, but I like it: "Luck is what happens when opportunity meets with preparation." Bye now.

MSU

Louis Camacho-Rosado

Hello Everyone! The MSU has two events planned for this week.

This Tuesday, the "What's on Everyone's Minds?" Speaker Series will be held in the Bryant Center. Also, the Unity Day celebration focusing on Asian and Middle Eastern Cultures will be held on Wednesday in the Rotunda.

The MSU is currently planning some activities for the upcoming months. If you'd like to offer some ideas on events that you'd like to see on campus, email us at:

MSU@acad.bryant.edu

I'd like to send a thank you to the Follet's Bookstore manager, Mrs. Jolie Clark Coleman. The bookstore has made a contribution of books on a variety of topics to our MSU display in front of the bookstore. Thank you, Mrs. Clark Coleman.

The United Nations Festival was held this past Sunday in the MAC, where several of our members ran our table. I'd like to thank our very dedicated members who ran our table at the UN Festival. Good job, folks!! Also, congratulations to the International Student Organization for coordinating such a fantastic event on Sunday.

Our meeting will be held next week in Bryant Center room 2A. Everyone is welcome to attend!

Ciao!

Hello everyone! First off, we would like to congratulate all of our new members: Candace, Rista, Kenna, Nicole, Keli, Jerri-Lee, Sue, Elena, Kristy, and Gia. Best of luck. Congrats also to all new big sisters. The Seniors have been busy; congratulations to all those who have gotten interviews, and a big congrats to Melissa who is the first Senior to get a great job. Thanks to Webster for all the hard work that went into making our Parents' Weekend a success. I hope all sisters' midterms went well, keep up the good work. Congrats to Jess for being selected to be on the Career Services Student Advisory Board. Thanks to Cassie and all the sisters for an awesome Jail N Bail last week. And to Disney, we are all so proud that you aced your auditing exam congratulations.

The sisters would like to thank Delta for Friday night. The table dancers were back once again, and we had an awesome time. Sig Ep, thanks for the "open" party on Saturday night; we had a blast. Sunshine, how 'bout that slumber party on Thursday night? What a surprise on Friday morning-Bubbla. Hey Sprite, game on! Sunny's brothers rocked the free world this weekend. Screech is back in full effect and would like to say to Webster: Do a little Dance. Thanks to Mork and Smithers for the fashion show on Monday night, it was quite entertaining. Tricia's Pooh Bear is half way to first and maybe on the way to second this weekend; good luck on the journey. Hey Webster, I didn't order a pepperoni and sausage pizza-Sprite. All the sisters are anxiously waiting for our annual Fall Harvest Dance on Friday, although some of us still need to find dates. By the way Rhonda, I am very proud of you. And the quote of the week goes to Sahara and Sunny, "Hey Baby..." Till next week.

Student Alumni Association

by Darrell Cook

Thanks to all those Bryant students who helped support the Student Alumni Association by donating a dollar at last Thursday's Junction Night. Also, a special thank you to Wherehouse, who performed at the Junction on behalf of the SAA. Hope that everyone had a good time and is looking forward to the possibility of another in the future.

Candy and Carnations is off to a good start. If anyone is interested in sending another student a bag of candy along with a carnation please contact the Liisa Knight for further details. Hope that all chairpeople who attended the supper at the Junction on Sunday found it enjoyable. What about that "fill in" President? Hope that I was able to clue everyone in on the events that will be taking place in the near future. I wish you all the best of luck. I know that these committees will be even more of a success than they were in the past.

Hello everyone! First I'd like to say our consultant is finally gone! Yippee!

You can finally have your room back, Cindy, and all our lives can go back to normal! I'd like to congratulate and welcome our new associate class: Christie, Ann, Heidi, Kristina, Erika, Stephanie, Kristin, Christine, Kloster, Jaime, Nikki, Jill, Jen, Julie, and lil' Jen. You guys are the best! I'd also like to say congratulations to all the other new Greek associate classes. You all made the right choice!

This past weekend was fantastic! Maureen had a super 21st b-day celebration; good job Rob. Stand up and look out, your limo awaits! Kevin and his stogie were a good time! Streci, couldn't you have waited till you were outside the limo? Sorry about what happened Vicki. Andria, get in the picture. Oops sorry, you're busy.

Thanks Beta for Thursday; we had a good time. Sig Ep, we had an awesome time; we'll have to do it again real soon, with the exception of the hole and the Razmataz. I'm sure I speak for all of us when I say that Saturday with our parents was a great time. We not only got the chance to meet our associate's parents, but party with our own as well. I never thought they would be that good at canoe races, or get that addicted to them; enough with the tippy cup! It was certainly hot in Wright's, road trip to Assumption? Aren't you glad you came, Shila. No Dad, I don't think we need their picture; at least they thanked you generously for it. Larry treated all of us to a round on the house, what a guy. Jamie, I wish our parents had a sleep over. Mel and Gina, how about our Dads and the best out of 5. Was Tony the champ?

Delta, Saturday was great; we can always count on a good time with you guys. Do all those people go here; funny we've never seen them before. Hey Flowbee, next week, top ten reasons why Tri Sig thinks they own the dance table in your suite. Hey Sarah, this weekend never should've happened. Dana, get ready for the big day; you're dead! Sorry Foxboro was so awful on Sunday, I feel bad for all of you that had to go.

One last thing, Russell, Lark, Dave, Jamie, Danielle, and Spalding: that gravity can get to you sometimes, huh! "Spalding did the 4 finger Jiffy! Jamie attempted the 5 finger but failed. Russell entertained us for a while with his singing and dancing.

That's all folks; same time, same place next week. Have a good one! Check ya later -Ivy May!

If you are interested in joining SAM, it's not too late. Attend our meeting on Wednesday, October 30, in room 2B in the Bryant Center. We will be hosting a Toastmaster's meeting, where you will be able to hear fellow students make Icebreaker speeches.

There is also a Career Services meeting on Tuesday, October 29, at 3:30 p.m. in the MRC Lecture hall. We hope to see you there.

Jae Guttadauro

Invitamos a todos los estudiantes a que vengan a ver lo que el club de español les puede ofrecer. Si no sabe sobre el club de español...pues, esta es su oportunidad para enterarse del mismo. Welcome to the first article printed on behalf of the Spanish club. So far this year we have had one meeting and one great 'fiesta'. If you missed out the first time, don't worry there will be many more opportunities to 'divertirse' with our club activities. Our next meeting will be Monday, October 28 at 5:00 p.m. in room 2A of the Bryant Center, pizza and soda will be served. I would like to emphasize that the club is for both native, and non-native Spanish speakers and that the level of proficiency is not important, so don't feel intimidated to come check out what we have to offer. Espero que nos veamos!

Hi everybody. I hope most of you enjoyed having your families up for parents' weekend, and had fun with all of the entertainment for the weekend.

As for this coming week, the Student Programming Board has many activities scheduled. On Friday the 25, Lazertag will be held from 7 p.m. till 1 a.m. in the MAC. On Saturday the 26 at 8 p.m., and on Sunday the 27 at 6:30 and 9:15, SPB will be showing "The Rock". Saturday admission is $1 and Sunday admission is $1.50 with popcorn and soda. Finally, Tuesday the 27 will be Bingo night, starting at 9:30 p.m.

Our next meeting will be held on Monday the 26, at 4:30 in Papitto. SPB will be participating in Position Swapping for the first time this year. It should be a lot of fun to watch. Don't miss it. Have a great week.

CAMPUS SCENE

Although it was dark that night, I think I saw something growing out of Soto's head. I'm sure all is well now.

Happy 21st goes to Duke. And what a better way to celebrate than to be shut off from the scorpion with Weasel. The ride back was good when Horton decided to decorate the back of Dukes car a little bit—"Yep, that was the soup".

We've had the pleasure of having some alumni up lately. Terry is doing well, and it's good to see Pope and Neely up to their old tricks. Gaspar also came down; is it just me or has he lost some weight? Rico popped up from San Diego and treated the townhouses all weekend. The Rico-day weekend that was thought to be lost was once again regained. Black angus!

The first ever MLS championship was played at Foxboro recently and the lucky seven would like to give a great big thanks to Nyce. At least they had all those great fans to help them out all day. A rumble nearly occurred, but Nyce was not home. Speaking of battles, there has not been much on the floor lately. The latest was a quick knock-out as Virta sent Weasel unconscious.

In sports, the B football team has not played in a while but is still 3-1. The A team lost a couple of tough games but is still ready for a playoff run.

Well, that's about all for this week. The newest edition will insure dank in the glass for many 420's to come. Here's one last quote from the great Horton: "Ooh, are they the minty ones?" Later.

Hey Theta! Midterms are pretty much over! We will all get a break soon. What The Heck?! Thanks to all the parents who were here this past weekend! It was nice to see everyone.

First of all, Kelly is okay! Thank you Delta and Sarah for all of your help! Ben—"I need help!"- Kelly.

Thanks to Delta for Thursday night! The fruit was so good! Thanks Beta for dinner and hour of fun Friday night! Saturday on our floor was fun, to a point...

First day at Foxboro was so cold and so wet, with many crazed soccer fans in trash bags. "Otovic, could you please help these people on the side!" It will all be worth it in the end girls!

If you have any new editions to the etiquette list let Magenta know. Hey Bertie, Congratulations on losing the bet. Kendall—this song makes me want to slit my roast. Nikki, Jaime, Hiedi, and Michelle had an interesting ride to Hiedi's house! "Wo Vincent's Potato Chips" Next time she will know the way without directions. Otovic gives a big thanks to Fitzy for the new birthmark on the side of her face! Sandy scared Cosmxxx. Bump me and I'll bump you back! Hiedi, Nikki, and Jolie all hung out. Lata Theta!

Thinking of you on your birthday Spartan. We miss you—you will be in our hearts forever—love always, Theta.

Well, it's nice to see that we finally have an article in The Archway. I'd like to thank Guido for his great articles the past few weeks. Now, instead of the H2 news, here's all the TKE news that's fit to print.

First of all, there seems to be some kind of rotten stench coming from up on the floor. We have identified it, though. It seems to be some kind of pork product. Can you guess what or who it is? Anyway, the floor is still in one piece (sort of), so that should put an end to any of the rumors that have been flying around (KMart anyone?)

TKE would like to thank Delta Zeta for all of our invitations, and, as Luongo always says, if you whine enough, you'll always get your way.

Onto the weekend. Thanks to everyone who stopped by on Friday; we had a good time. Hey Ryan, I'd like you to meet my sister.....well, maybe not. I'd also like to wish a Happy Birthday to Fonz, a Happy 21st to Cujo, and a Happy Birthday to Zeus. Hey Zeus, how does it feel to hit the big 30? Cujo, you just lucked out boy, (pond?). Cujo seems to have lost the bathroom — wait, you mean it's not in Philly's room anymore?

In TKE sports, I think we play volleyball, but I'm not sure. And that's about it. If anyone wants to find us, we're still in Dorm 2, Floor 2 (for right now). Have a good week.

SOLID INVESTMENT

Are U.S. Savings Bonds the rock-solid investment that you are looking for? Savings bonds earn market-based interest rates, offer tax benefits such as exemption from State and local income taxes and deferral of Federal income taxes on earnings. Bonds are safe, backed by the full faith and credit of the United States and, if lost, stolen, or destroyed, they can be replaced.

Games of the Week

Last Week (3-1)

#14 Virginia vs #2 Florida St.

It's payback time for the Seminoles, who last year, lost to the Cavs in the closing seconds when Warrick Dunn was stopped short of the end zone. Even with Virginia gaining confidence after their 62 point outburst last Saturday, the Florida St. defense will be ready to stop TiKi Barber and the rest of the Cavs. Florida St. wins it easily. FSU 38 Virginia 13

#7 Alabama vs #6 Tennessee

This should be a great game in the SEC. Peyton Manning leads a Vols team that has gotten itself back on track after the loss to Florida. What Tennessee needs is a convincing win and a great performance by Manning if they want to get back into the national picture. 'Bama, on the other hand, knows how to play defense, thus making this a much closer game than many people think. Tennessee 24 Alabama 18

#3 Ohio St. vs #20 Iowa

A good showing here for the Buckeyes could gain them some of the votes they lost after two subpar weeks. Iowa has beaten the Buck eyes in the four years, and the trend should continue. Ohio St. 42 Iowa 17

Dallas vs Miami

A big game for both teams as Jimmy Johnson goes against his former employer. Dallas is clearly the more talented team, but I'm sure Jimmy Johnson will have his team fired up, as will Barry Switzer. Dallas 21 Miami 20
